Navigating Wikipedia Pages
Step 1: Create a Wikipedia Account

If you don’t have one yet, click here to create an account.

Keep in mind that all of your Wikipedia edits will be public, so you may want to create an anonymous username.
Orienting yourself on a Wikipedia Page

Once you’re logged in, open a Wikipedia article like this one.

You’ll see three tabs at the top right corner of your screen: Read, Edit, and View History.
You can click the View history tab to see a complete “revision history” of every edit that has been made on that page since it was created.
Getting to the Visual Editor

Click on the Edit Source tab.

The first time you click here, you’ll be given the option to go to the visual editor. Go ahead and click Switch to visual editor.
The Edit page: Visual Editor

Welcome to the edit page — your main editor workspace! You’ll see that you can type directly on the content of the page. The top toolbar is your friend. It will provide additional tools for editing and publishing your edits. Let’s see what it has to offer!
The Toolbar: Links and Citations

Use this button to add hyperlinks

Use this button to add citations, either manually or with the automatic citations creator.
The Toolbar: Links and Citations

Use these buttons for text formatting (like adding headers, and making text bold or italic)
Once you’re on a Talk Page, you can click Edit source or New section to make changes to it. You can also View history to see the talk page’s history.
